Brand New Book  Print on Demand .This paper examines the structure and consequences of eligibility rules for a major social program in the U.S. - the Job Training Partnership Act. We find that temporal and geographic variation in written eligibility rules has little consequence for the size and composition of the eligible population, but stable rules are important. The stable eligibility rules are inequitable because they discriminate on the basis of income sources and family status. We examine whether this inequity is a consequence of efficient screening, given standard objectives for government intervention in human capital markets. Many - but not all - of the JTPA eligibility rules are consistent with an efficient screening strategy.
