These exercises are to be continued with a larger number of staffs. The hints given above, will enable the teacher to conduct the laying of staffs in a manner interesting, as well as useful, for her pupils. It is advisable to guide the activity of the child occasionally in another direction. The pupils may all be called upon to lay tables, which can be produced from two to ten staffs, or houses which can be laid with eighteen staffs. Another change in this occupation can be introduced by employing two, four, or eight times, divided staffs. It is obvious that, in this manner, the figures may often assume a greater similarity and better proportions than is possible if only staffs of the same length are employed. If a staff is not entirely broken through, but only bent with a break on one side, an angle is produced. If a staff forms several such angles, it can be used to represent a curved or rounded line, and...
