The most obvious variations in human teeth occur in the upper central incisors. Examination of over one thousand specimens from all parts of the world showed wide and marked variations in all races, with only vague indications of racial peculiarities. Arranging these teeth according to the most striking peculiarities and resemblances it soon became apparent that there are three very distinct forms of human central incisors. Class 1, with sides parallel for more than half their length; Class 2, with sides rapidly converging from the cutting edge toward the root; Class 3, with a double curve on one, and sometimes on both sides. The great majority are various blendings of these typed forms, but in most teeth one or the other is clearly dominant. An examination of the skulls in the large collection of the Museum of the Royal College of Surgeons of London showed all three of these types of teeth in every racial group. The racial types of teeth which I had expected to find were non-existent. Instead, all races have three types of teeth, with certain minor racial variations. Subsequent study in other large museums and more than fifteen years experience in the examination of teeth in the mouths of living people have established this discovery beyond a doubt. These same three types of teeth, even more strongly marked in their leading characteristics, are found in the gorilla, the orang-utan and the chimpanzee. As yet these variations have not been found in the teeth of any other animals. These...
